

Meow Belle — Cat Owner

Research (ICP & Buyer Profile)

Foundational research for every Meow Belle ad, headline and product page. Built 27 July 2026.

Separate private business. Meow Belle only. Never mix with Mindframe.

What this is. The foundational research document behind every ad, every headline, every product page. Built on the Mark Builds Brands "Foundational Docs" process (Zero to $1K/day, Section 6): before you write a word of copy, you build deep research on who you sell to, why they buy, what emotional buttons exist, how they talk, and what objections they raise. Everything downstream gets easier if this exists and harder if it does not.

How to use it. Feed this file to Claude alongside PRODUCTS.md and PRICING.md before generating any ad copy, static-ad JSON, product description or landing page. Do not write creative from imagination when this file exists.

Built 2026-07-27. Sources at the bottom. Anything I could not verify is flagged [UNVERIFIED] rather than smoothed over.

TL;DR — the seven things that change what we do

1. 🚨 We look like a scam, and that costs us more than our price does. Bangladeshi shoppers open every unknown online store expecting fraud: "If I buy online, I will probably get scammed." We are an unknown brand, on a misspelled domain, with no reviews, no phone number and hardcoded star ratings we did not earn. Fix the trust checklist in 7.5 before a taka of ad spend. It is the cheapest work on this list and it gates everything else.
- 0b. The affluent buyer is the Persian owner. Spends 5,000+/month, buys to avoid vet bills, and needs exactly the three SKUs nobody stocks or advertises: Choosy, Hairball, Skin & Coat. And they reposition us: stop saying "premium," start saying vet-grade without Royal Canin money. Compare upward to Royal Canin at ~৳2,500/kg, never sideways to the ৳1,050 shops.

1. "Premium cat food in Dhaka" is a red ocean and we lose it. We sell an identical bag that three shops have in stock right now at ৳1,050. We charge ৳1,190. Two local brands sell at roughly ৳330/kg against our ৳793/kg. We cannot win a price argument and we cannot win a "premium quality" argument, because every shop in the market already shouts "১০০% অরিজিনাল, প্রিমিয়াম."
1. Half the market is out of stock. Of the 90 competitor listings we logged, 47 are in stock. 52%. On the problem-specific recipes it collapses: Choosy 2 of 4, Hairball 3 of 8, Skin & Coat 3 of 7, Urinary 4 of 8. And the cheapest listings are usually the dead ones (BD Pet Mart's ৳850, Pet Zone's ৳1,050, AmarPet's ৳1,050 are all out of stock).
1. That is the purple ocean. We are not in the cat food business. We are in the "my cat has a specific problem, the vet or the internet told me to change her food, and the food that fixes it is out of stock everywhere" business. Our catalogue is already built for it: 9 recipes, 7 of them problem-specific. Nobody in Bangladesh advertises this way. Every competitor ad we pulled is a generic shop ad.
1. Picky eating is the market's deepest fear, and it is a switching fear. Cats refuse new brands. Supply is unreliable. So a stock-out forces a diet change, the diet change upsets the cat, and the owner blames the food. This one loop explains most of the anxiety in this market, and it is the emotional core of both our best angle (reliable supply) and our biggest objection (will she even eat it).
1. The single bag is close to unwinnable on cold traffic. ৳1,190 at 21% contribution is a 4.7x break-even ROAS. The 3-pack at ৳3,570 earns ৳741 for roughly the same ad cost. Every cold ad should be pointed at the 3-pack or at a problem, never at "a bag of food."

PART 1 — The market, in numbers

1.1 Size and direction

Fact	Number	Source
Total pet food + accessories market	~Tk 200 crore/yr, growing 20%+/yr	Daily Star, 2023

Cat food specifically	Tk 100–150 crore/yr (industry estimate, no official data)	Chonk co-founder, TBS 2025
Cats as share of pets	~90% of pet ownership	PetfoodIndustry
Projected pet food market	$308.5m by 2028 (+9.52%)	Statista via Daily Star
Import tax on cat food	50% — classed as a luxury item	TBS 2025

Two things follow. The category is growing fast enough that a new brand can enter. And the 50% luxury tax is why everything is expensive, which means price complaints are not really about us. That is useful.

1.2 The price ladder (per kg)

Tier	Brands	₳/kg
Ultra premium	Royal Canin, Hill's	950–1,500+
Premium import	Reflex Plus , Bonacibo, Kaniva	550–900
Mid	SmartHeart, Whiskas, Me-O, Lara	550–650
Budget import	Drools, Kat Club	400–450
Loose / repacked	unbranded, mixed	350–400
Local manufacture	Chonk ₳332, Oskies ₳320	320–350

Meow Belle sits at ₳793/kg (₳1,190 ÷ 1.5 kg). That is the top of the premium-import band, just under Royal Canin territory, and 2.4x the local brands.

⚠ This is the number to internalise. We are not "a bit above the shops." On a per-kg basis we are near the ceiling of the mainstream market. Nothing in our creative can pretend otherwise. We either justify it or we lose.

1.3 Availability, the finding that reframes everything

From our own 90-row competitor sweep (2026-07-27-all-competitor-listings.csv):

Product	Listings	In stock
Prostar Kitten 15 kg	1	0
Reflex Plus Choosy Salmon	4	2
Reflex Plus Sterilised Chicken	3	2
Reflex Plus Hairball Salmon	8	3
Reflex Plus Kitten Salmon	5	3
Reflex Plus Skin & Coat Salmon	7	3
Reflex Plus Urinary Chicken	8	4
Reflex Plus Mother & Baby	7	5
Reflex Plus Adult Chicken	21	11
Reflex Plus Kitten Chicken	20	11
All	90	47 (52%)

And this is not random. It matches what the industry says about itself:

"Another major concern with these products is the market's heavy syndication. Availability is unpredictable, you don't always get them when you need them. Pet food vendors often hoard stock and claim it's unavailable, creating artificial shortages." — Muhammed Asif Khan, Chonk co-founder, TBS

"This becomes a big problem for cat owners since felines are extremely picky eaters and often refuse to switch brands. When supplies run out unexpectedly, finding the same product immediately can be a struggle. A sudden change in diet can disrupt a cat's digestion and overall well-being, so delays in getting their usual food can be quite stressful for both the pet and the owner." — same source

On the flagship bag the discount gap is real (Pet Elements, Miki and Mew Mew are genuinely in stock at ₳1,050–1,090). On the problem recipes, it mostly is not. That split should drive which SKUs we advertise.

1.4 What competitors actually run as ads

Pulled 120 live Meta ads targeting Bangladesh, keyword "cat food" and "বিড়ালের খাবার" (2026-07-27, active only, sorted by impressions). 58 unique pet ads after cleaning.

Word frequency across those ads:

Claim	Mentions
premium / প্রিমিয়াম	26
price / দাম	23
original / অরিজিনাল / ১০০% / authentic	21
health	16
free / free delivery	17
discount / offer / অফার	22
kitten	7
urinary	3
vet	4
skin / coat	2

Everyone is a shop, nobody is a brand. Pet Zone BD (203k page likes), Miki Pet Store (128k), Amarpet (106k), Decent Pet Shop (82k). Their ads all say the same four things: we stock everything, it is 100% original, delivery is free or cheap, here is 5% off.

Real examples:

- Pet Zone BD: "১০০% অরিজিনাল ও কোয়ালিটি প্রোডাক্ট... এখন আর বাইরে যাওয়ার ঝামেলা নেই" (100% original and quality products... no more hassle of going outside)
- Miki: "100% Original Products 🇬🇧 Nationwide Home Delivery ❤️ Trusted Pet Store"
- Amarpet: "১০০ ভাগ অথেনটিক ও ইমপোর্টেড প্রোডাক্ট" (100% authentic and imported)
- Petsmart BD attacking on origin: "কেন আপনার বিড়ালকে সস্তা ও নিম্নমানের থাইল্যান্ড, মালয়েশিয়ার খাবার খাওয়াবেন?" (why feed your cat cheap low-quality Thai and Malaysian food?) — country of origin is used as a quality proxy in this market. Reflex Plus is Turkish, European-standard. That is an asset we have not used.
- Oskies (local brand, ₳320/kg) is the sharpest copy in the market: "বিড়ালরা একটা জিনিসে খুব এক্সপার্ট। যেটা পছন্দ না, সেটা দ্বিতীয়বার ছুঁয়েও দেখবে না। আর যেটা পছন্দ হয়ে যায়... তুমি বুঝে ওঠার আগেই বাটিটা খালি।" (Cats are expert at one thing. What they don't like, they won't touch twice. And what they do like, the bowl is empty before you notice.) Then: "International Quality. Bangladeshi Price. প্রতিদিন ১০০+ Cat Parent Oskies-এ switch করছে।"

The gap: not one advertiser in the pull sold a solution to a named cat problem. Zero hairball ads. Three urinary mentions across 58 ads. That is the opening.

1.5 The two competitors that actually matter

Forget the pet shops. They are distribution, not brands, and their ads are wallpaper.

Chonk — Bangladesh's first locally manufactured cat food, launched Nov 2024.

- ₳499 for 1.5 kg (₳332/kg), ₳149 for a 300g sampler
- BSTI certified, German lab formulation, AAFCO/FEDIAF standards, factory inside Dhaka
- Free shipping inside Dhaka, 50 to 200+ retail outlets, expanding to ~300
- Press in Financial Express, TBS, Daily Star, Prothom Alo
- Positioning: anti-syndicate, anti-counterfeit, "Trusted by Vets. Loved by Cats"
- Enforces MRP at retailers so it "cannot be turned into loose or repacked cat food"
- Fixed their kibble shape and oil coating after customers reported odour and digestibility complaints, which tells you they listen and iterate

Oskies — local, ₳320/kg for 1 kg, free Dhaka delivery, 27k page likes, running the best creative in the category.

⚠️ We cannot beat either on price, delivery, or local-brand goodwill. They are 2.4x cheaper and ship free. Any ad of ours that argues "good food at a good price" walks straight into them and loses. This is exactly Mark's red ocean.

1.6 Who owns cats in Bangladesh

- Cats are ~90% of pet ownership; import demand around $43m/yr (PetfoodIndustry)
- University-educated young adults, skewing women aged 21–30, in Dhaka and other large cities, keeping cats indoors (PetfoodIndustry)
- Monthly spend: ₳1,000–3,000 on food, ₳500–1,000 litter and supplies, ₳5,000–10,000/yr vaccines and grooming (Arogga). One owner quoted at "more than Tk 3,000 per month for two cats" (Daily Star)
- A large and growing independent rescuer/adopter population in Dhaka, driven by a decade of rescue and spay campaigns (Daily Star). Dedicated cat infrastructure now exists: Biral Bari sanctuary in Bashundhara (~70 cats), MeowMatch BD and PetBhai adoption platforms
- Pet humanisation is explicitly the driver: owners treating cats as family members and buying to their own standard of living (Daily Star)
- Cat keeping is religiously encouraged, which matters in this market: "বিড়াল পালন বৈধ তবে তার সঠিক যত্ন নেয়া জরুরী" (keeping a cat is permitted, but proper care of it is obligatory) (Arogga). Care is framed as a duty, not a preference. That is a much stronger emotional lever than "spoil your pet."

PART 2 — Purple ocean: where Meow Belle actually competes

Mark's Purple Ocean rule: do not enter a market with no competition (no demand) and do not fight in the saturated middle (no margin). Enter a proven market and carve out a hyper-specific slice. "If you try to sell to everybody, you're really selling to nobody."

Applied here, this is the whole strategic call:

❌ Red ocean (do not fight here)	"Premium cat food in Bangladesh." Twelve shops sell our exact bag, three cheaper and in stock. Two local brands are 2.4x cheaper with free delivery. Every ad in the category already claims premium and original.
❌ Blue ocean (does not exist)	No demand problem to invent. Cat food demand is proven and growing 20%/yr.
✅ Purple ocean (ours)	The specific problem recipes that half the market cannot keep in stock. Urinary, hairball, fussy eater, skin and coat, sterilised weight gain, kitten growth, nursing mother. Proven demand (the SKUs exist and shops list them), thin competition (they are out of stock 50–75% of the time), zero advertising (0–3 mentions across 58 live ads).

Our catalogue was already built for this and we have been advertising it as if it were not. Nine 1.5 kg recipes, seven of them named after a problem. The current ad set leads with "37% protein. Zero filler." That is a red-ocean claim. Every shop in Dhaka says it.

2.1 The sub-niches, ranked

Following the doc's format. Each one is a specific problem, a felt emotional pain, a product we already stock, and a reason we can win it.

1. The blocked or straining male cat ★ strongest

- Category: urgent feline health
- Specific problem: cat goes to the litter box repeatedly, strains, produces nothing or produces blood.

In male cats this is a life-threatening emergency within 24–48 hours.

- Emotional pain: pure fear. The owner has either just come back from a vet with a bill and an instruction to change the food permanently, or is watching it happen and panicking. Price sensitivity at this moment is close to zero.
- Our product: Reflex Plus Adult Urinary Chicken 1.5 kg, ₳1,190.
- Why we win it: 8 competitor listings, 4 in stock. Zero advertisers in the category target this. Risk factors are exactly the profile of a Dhaka cat: indoor, less active, exclusively dry food (AVMA). Male cats are anatomically predisposed (veterinary consensus). It is also repeat-forever demand, because once a cat has blocked the vet puts it on urinary food for life. Highest lifetime value buyer in the entire catalogue.
- ! Guardrail: never claim we treat, cure or prevent a disease. Frame as "the food vets put urinary cats on" and point people to a vet. Medical overclaim is the one thing that can actually hurt us.

2. The cat who will not eat ★ strongest

- Specific problem: owner bought a bag, cat sniffed it and walked away. Or the usual brand vanished from every shop, the owner was forced to switch, and now the cat is refusing food and the owner is watching an expensive bag go stale.
- Emotional pain: helplessness plus guilt plus wasted money. This is the single most universally shared experience in this market, and both Chonk and Oskies build copy on it.
- Our product: Reflex Plus Adult Choosy Salmon 1.5 kg, ₳1,190.
- Why we win it: 2 of 4 listings in stock, the scarcest recipe in the sweep. And it is the only product in the category whose name is the objection. The bag is literally called Choosy. That is a rare gift: the product answers the market's loudest fear on the packaging.
- The catch: this angle raises the "will she eat it" objection at the same time it solves it, so it needs a risk-reversal at the offer level (see 6.3).

3. Hairballs and shedding all over the flat

- Specific problem: cat retches up hairballs on the floor; fur is on every surface of a small Dhaka apartment; long-haired Persians (very common locally) are the worst.
- Emotional pain: it is disgusting, it is daily, it is embarrassing when guests come, and the owner half-suspects it means the cat is unwell.
- Our product: Reflex Plus Adult Hairball Salmon 1.5 kg (5% fibre), and Skin & Coat Salmon for the shedding side.
- Why we win it: Hairball 3 of 8 in stock, Skin & Coat 3 of 7. Zero hairball ads in the market. AmarPet has run two separate Bengali blog posts on cat shedding, which tells us the search demand is there and nobody is monetising it with ads.

4. The new kitten, and the terror of doing it wrong

- Specific problem: a first kitten arrives, usually rescued or gifted. The owner has no idea what to feed it and is being told conflicting things (rice and fish from family, dry food from the internet, something else from the shop).
- Emotional pain: anxiety about causing harm. Kittens are fragile and this owner knows it. The local guidance is blunt about it: insufficient protein causes disease, homemade food is either bacterially risky (raw) or nutritionally empty (boiled) (Mew Mew Shop BD).
- Our product: Reflex Plus Kitten Chicken (37% protein, 20% fat) and Kitten Salmon.
- Why we win it: it is the entry point to a 12 to 15 year customer, and 37% protein is a genuinely strong number to put on a poster. Kitten Chicken is our most-listed competitor SKU (20 listings, 11 in stock) so competition is real here, but the buyer's willingness to pay for reassurance is higher than at any other life stage.
- This is the highest-LTV acquisition, so never discount it hardest. The flat ₳1,190 across all recipes already fixed the earlier mistake of pricing kittens cheapest.

5. Post-spay weight gain

- Specific problem: cat was spayed or neutered (Dhaka has had a decade of rescue-and-spay campaigns, so this population is large), and then got fat and lazy on the same food.
- Emotional pain: visible guilt, "I did this to her," plus real worry about diabetes and joints.
- Our product: Reflex Plus Sterilised Chicken (12% fat vs 14% adult), Prostar Sterilised Salmon.
- Why we win it: 2 of 3 listings in stock, and nobody in Bangladesh sells the Sterilised Chicken 15 kg at all (our own sweep). Spay/neuter is culturally normalised here in a way it is not in much of South Asia, so the addressable base is unusually large.

6. The nursing mother and her litter

- Specific problem: a pregnant or nursing cat, often a rescue, needs far more energy than adult food provides, and so do kittens weaning off her.
- Emotional pain: rescuer responsibility. Frequently an accidental litter the owner is now committed to keeping alive.
- Our product: Reflex Plus Mother & Baby (32% protein, 22% fat), 1.5 kg and 8 kg.
- Why we win it: nobody in Bangladesh sells the Mother & Baby 8 kg. Monopoly SKU. Small audience, but it converts on need, not price, and it ties directly into the rescue community which is the most connected, most word-of-mouth-driven segment in this market.

7. "Is this even real food?"

- Specific problem: the owner does not trust what is in the bag. Counterfeit and repacked food is an active, documented problem: mixed branded and unbranded food sold loose at ₹350–400/kg with no quality assurance, plus counterfeit incidents that caused vomiting and diarrhoea and directly triggered Chonk's founding in April 2024.
- Emotional pain: betrayal and suspicion. Every ad in the market screams "১০০% অরিজিনাল" precisely because nobody believes anybody.
- Our product: the whole catalogue, sourced and sealed.
- Why this is a support angle, not a lead angle: 21 of 58 competitor ads already make this exact claim. Leading with it makes us sound like everyone else. It belongs on the product page and in the second line of an ad, not in the headline.

8. Reliable supply ★ the brand-level position

- Specific problem: the food my cat eats disappears from every shop and I have to switch, which upsets her stomach, and then I have to switch again when it comes back.
- Emotional pain: low-grade dread, repeated monthly. Documented by the Chonk founder and visible in our own 52% stock rate.
- Our product: the 3-Month Supply (3 × 1.5 kg, ₹3,570) is literally the solution to this problem and we have been selling it as "a bulk discount."
- Why this is the strongest brand-level position we have: it justifies the ₹140 premium without arguing about quality, it converts our margin-best SKU, and it is the one thing a 12-shop reseller market structurally cannot promise.

2.2 The ranking, for ad-testing order

Rank	Sub-niche	SKU	Competitor stock	Ads in market
1	Won't eat / fussy	Choosy Salmon	2 of 4	0
2	Straining to pee	Urinary Chicken	4 of 8	~3 mentions
3	3 months, no stock-outs	3-Month Supply	n/a	0
4	Hairballs / shedding	Hairball + Skin & Coat	3 of 8, 3 of 7	0

5	New kitten	Kitten Chicken	11 of 20	7 mentions
6	Post-spay weight	Sterilised Chicken	2 of 3	0
7	Nursing mother	Mother & Baby	5 of 7	0

PART 3 — Foundational Doc 1: WHO we are selling to Three segments. Two we want. One is a trap.

Segment A — The Anxious New Cat Parent

Roughly 21 to 30, university-educated, skewing female, Dhaka, indoor cat, 0 to 12 months in.

Her first cat was usually rescued off the street or handed to her by a friend whose cat had kittens. She did not plan this. She is now responsible for a life and she is treating it with the seriousness of a new parent, because that is exactly what the culture tells her to do: keeping the cat is permitted, caring for it properly is obligatory.

She researches constantly and trusts almost nobody. She reads the Bengali pet blogs, she asks Facebook groups, she watches what other cat parents post. Her mother thinks rice and fish is fine. The internet says that will hurt the cat. She does not know who is right and it worries her.

- Spends: ₳1,000–3,000/month on food. A ₳1,190 bag is a considered purchase, not a casual one.
- Buys: online, Facebook page inbox or a shop's site, cash on delivery.
- Cares most about: not doing damage. Growth, protein, "is this the right food for her age."
- What she is scared of: feeding something that turns out to be fake or bad; the cat getting sick and it being her fault.
- Why she matters: she is the highest lifetime value buyer in the market. A cat lives 12 to 15 years. Capture her at kitten stage and you own a decade of ₳1,190 bags.

● Segment B — The Problem Solver

Any age, any income above middle, one to three cats, has just had a scare.

Something is wrong. The cat is straining in the litter box. Or throwing up hairballs every morning. Or has stopped eating for two days. Or the vet has just said the words "change her food." This person was a normal cat owner a week ago and is now researching cat nutrition at 2am.

- Price sensitivity: temporarily near zero. She has just paid a vet bill. A £140 difference on the bag that fixes it is not a consideration.
- Urgency: extreme. She wants it today, not "in stock next week."
- What she is scared of: the cat getting worse; being the person who ignored the signs.
- Why she matters: this is our buyer. Highest intent, lowest competition, least price resistance, and on urinary and sterilised the prescription is permanent, so she becomes a repeat customer by medical necessity rather than by loyalty.
- The catch: she is small in number on any given day. This is a targeting-by-creative problem, not a targeting-by-audience problem. The ad has to name her exact symptom so she self-identifies out of a broad audience. That is precisely what Mark means by "creatives ARE your targeting in 2026."

● Segment D — The Pedigree Owner (the money) ★

added 2026-07-27

Owns a Persian or another pedigree, spends 5,000+/month all-in, buys on vet-bill avoidance.

This is the affluent buyer. They already pay Royal Canin and Farmina prices, they research brands properly, and their governing belief is that saving money on food costs more at the vet later: "DO NOT compromise on the quality of cat food... cheaper brands are known to cause kidney stones, chronic kidney disease, uti."

- Why they are the best fit in the catalogue: Persians are famously fussy ("Very choosy of what he will eat") and their long coats mean constant shedding and daily hairballs. That is Choosy, Hairball and Skin & Coat, three of our four scarcest SKUs, and nobody advertises any of them.
- How to talk to them: not "premium." They know what premium costs and it is Royal Canin. Talk "vet-grade nutrition without Royal Canin money." Against Royal Canin at roughly £2,500–3,000/kg, our £793/kg is the value choice.
- Price sensitivity: low, but they are informed, so no puffery survives contact.

● Segment C — The Multi-Cat Rescuer (the trap)

Feeds five to fifteen cats, buys 15 kg sacks, spends the most, and must not be our ad target.

Real example from TBS: Tanisha Khan, A-level student, seven cats, needs 15 kg a month, was spending nearly ₳15,000 and switched to a local brand to halve it.

This segment is the loudest voice in every Bangladeshi cat group, the most visible, and the most emotionally sympathetic. It is also the worst possible customer for us:

- They buy on ₳/kg and we are the most expensive per kg in the mainstream market.
- They will always choose Chonk at ₳332/kg or repacked at ₳350/kg over us at ₳793/kg.
- The SKU they want is the 15 kg, which we deliberately do not advertise (thin contribution, heavy delivery, own-rider only).

Do not build creative for them. If they find the 15 kg listing on their own and buy it, fine. Never pay to reach them. Serving this segment is what a charity does; we are not one.

PART 4 — Foundational Doc 2: WHY they buy

Nobody in this market wakes up wanting to buy cat food. They buy because a trigger fires.

4.1 The buying triggers, ranked by intent

Trigger	What just happened	Urgency	Price sensitivity
Vet said change the food	Diagnosis, usually urinary or weight	Today	None
Visible symptom	Straining, hairballs,	1–3 days	Very low

	hair fall, refusing food
Ran out and the usual is gone	Stock-out at their regular shop	Today	Medium
New kitten arrived	Rescue or gift	1–2 days	Low, reassurance-driven
Cat got spayed	Post-surgery, then gained weight	Weeks	Medium
Monthly restock	The bag is empty	Low	High

The last row is where we lose and where every competitor plays. "Buy your monthly cat food" is the offer with the most competition and the most price comparison. Everything above it is where we win.

4.2 The job the customer is hiring us for

Not "feed my cat." The real jobs, in the customer's own frame:

1. "Make this stop" — the symptom is visible and distressing and I want it gone.
2. "Tell me I'm not failing her" — I need to believe I am doing this right.
3. "Take one decision off my plate for three months" — I do not want to hunt for this bag again next month.
4. "Don't let me get cheated" — I need to know what is in the bag is what it says.

Every ad should be doing one of these four jobs. If a headline is not doing one of them, it is a "premium quality" ad and it will be ignored.

4.3 Why they would pay us ₮140 more

Only three reasons hold up. Anything else is wishful.

1. It is actually in stock and it arrives. Half the market is not. Their cheaper price is often a listing, not a product.
2. It is the specific recipe their cat needs, and the shops that stock it are out of it more often than not.
3. The founding-customer price makes the premium feel like a floor, not a ceiling — the ₮1,190 reads as a discount from ₮1,450 rather than a markup over ₮1,050.

What will not carry the premium: better quality (identical bag), better brand (we have no brand yet), better nutrition (same numbers), or nicer photography (nobody pays ₹140 for photos).

PART 5 — Foundational Doc 3:

emotional buttons + how they talk

5.1 The emotional buttons, in order of force

1. Fear of harming her. The strongest button in the market. Not "your cat deserves better" but "the thing you are doing might be hurting her." Backed by culture: care is a duty.
2. Guilt about money. Every owner here is aware that good food is expensive because of a 50% luxury tax, and quietly feels bad about buying cheaper. Relief from that guilt sells.
3. Helplessness at a refusing cat. She will not eat, I paid for it, and I cannot make her.
4. Suspicion. Is this even real. Everyone is lying to me.
5. Pride in being a good cat parent. The identity is real and publicly performed. "Cat parent" and "বিড়ালের বাপ-মা" are how people describe themselves, not just how brands describe them.
6. Dread of the monthly hunt. Low-grade, repetitive, and completely unaddressed by anyone.

5.2 Voice of customer — exact language seen in the wild

Use these. Do not invent Bengali; these are all observed.

How they refer to themselves and the cat

- বিড়ালের বাপ-মায়েরা — "cat's moms and dads," used as a direct address (PAW Pet Shop ad)
- Cat Parent — used untranslated, in English, inside Bengali copy (Oskies ad)
- ফারবেবি — "fur baby" (Pet Zone BD ad)
- আপনার আদরের বিড়াল — "your beloved cat" (near-universal across ads)
- আপনার সখের বিড়াল — "the cat you keep out of love/hobby" (Amarpet ad)

How they talk about the problem

- পিকি ইটার — "picky eater," used as an English loanword in Bengali copy (Pet Zone BD ad)
- হট করে খাবার পরিবর্তন করবেন না — "don't change the food suddenly" (Arogga), standard advice everyone has read
- যেটা পছন্দ না, সেটা দ্বিতীয়বার ছুঁয়েও দেখবে না — "what she doesn't like, she won't touch a second time" (Oskies ad)
- সহজে হজম হয় — "digests easily," a purchase criterion, not a nice-to-have (Amarpet ad)
- লোম পড়া — hair shedding, common enough that AmarPet runs two blog posts on it

How the market signals trust

- ১০০% অরিজিনাল / ১০০ ভাগ অথেনটিক ও ইমপোর্টেড — the market's standard trust claim
- ক্যাশ অন ডেলিভারি — COD is the default expectation, not a feature
- স্টক আছে? — "is it in stock?" is a normal opening question in this market

5.2B Real owner words (Reddit, added 2026-07-27)

First-party voice. Pulled by Z from Reddit across r/bangladesh, r/Dhaka and neighbouring South Asian pet subs.

 Attribution warning, read this before quoting anything below. Reddit's summariser mixes r/bangladesh and r/Dhaka with r/pakistan, r/indiasocial, r/IndianPets and generic r/cats. Quotes are marked  where the source is clearly Bangladeshi (Bengali transliteration, or "Bangladesh" named in the text) and  where it is regional South Asian and only directional. Reddit also skews far more male, English-fluent and internet-native than our real buyer. Never put a  quote in an ad as a Bangladeshi customer voice.

The finding that outranks everything else: we look like a scam

From r/Dhaka, on why Bangladeshi shoppers distrust online stores.

"Between fake product photos, misleading descriptions, and sellers disappearing after taking advance payments, the market has created this default mindset 'If I buy online, I will probably get scammed.'"

"Many customers insist on cash on delivery only, no matter what."

"Even if I clearly mention a return or refund policy, they do not fully believe it."

"I feel Bangladesh started e-commerce on the wrong foot."

Now look at us through that lens. Brand nobody has heard of. Domain misspelled with three L's. No reviews. No physical shop. No phone number on the ad. Star ratings on the site that are hardcoded rather than earned. Every single trust signal this market checks, we currently fail.

This is a bigger conversion risk than our ₳140 price premium and it is cheaper to fix. Price loses you a comparison. Looking like a scam loses you the click. See 7.5.

 Our courier has a reputation problem

"Redx is the worst when ordering from independent pages."

"Firstly you don't know exactly when they'd arrive and if it's a cash on delivery you have to be present there to check the product and receive."

"Then they can't get the address right at all like evn after you explain them so many times."

We deliver under 5 kg on RedX. Our customer has opinions about RedX and they are bad, and "ordering from independent pages" is exactly what we are. Not a reason to switch (their Dhaka rates are why the margin works at all), but a reason to over-communicate: confirm by phone or WhatsApp, give a delivery window, and say who is bringing it.

On our actual brand, unprompted

"Reflex and Mera both recommended by vet." 🌐

"Get reflex plus urinary." 🌐

"We use reflex before we were using fluffy but our cat got his bladder blocked and so we had to change foods." 🌐

"Reflex isn't currently available in the market. Definitely short on supply." 🌐

"reflex food was 1.4k per month, now its 4k per month." 🌐

"The best are Reflex, Royal Canin, Diamond Naturals" · "Royal Canin, Josera or reflex. (First two are better)" 🌐

That third quote is our entire Urinary ad, written by a customer. Cheap food → blocked bladder → forced switch to Reflex. And people already name Reflex Plus Urinary by SKU as the answer. We do not have to teach this. We have to show up where it is already being said.

Note the hierarchy though: Reflex sits below Royal Canin and Farmina, not at the top. See 5.2C.

On availability, now confirmed by owners themselves

"That's honestly the biggest problem with keeping a pet. One time you get one brand of food, and the next time it isn't there." 🇧🇪

"The issue mostly is the availability of the food. It's just rarely available." 🌐

"Royal canin gastrointestinal cat food, I searched online couldn't find anywhere" 🇧🇩

"coziecat is almost always first to stock out so you need to keep checking with the petshops / stock up when you find them" 🇧🇩

"I'd still recommend giving your cat a variety including homemade foods because if someday the imports become too expensive or imports stop for whatever reason, you'll be in trouble." 🇧🇩

"Stock up when you find them" is the 3-Month Supply, described by a customer as a coping strategy before we ever sold it. That is the ad.

On homemade food, our real competitor

"Give her whatever homemade food you guys are eating. That's way more nutritious & healthy than store bought catfood." 🇧🇩

"My mom had 12 cats herself, all rescued. We used to feed them boiled fish with rice, sun dried fish, meat & sometime catfood." 🇧🇩

"Boiled chicken boiled fish boiled mishti kumra and boil korar extra Pani jeta oitao aar bhaat." 🇧🇩

"Feed boiled chicken, fish, kolija with vegetables along with occasional tokdoi and egg yolk." 🇧🇩

And the one that shows the way in:

"Baar Baar Khabar gorom kora jhamela dekhe I switched to dry catfood Bangladeshi akta brand ache chonk super affordable (1.5 kg 500taka)" 🇧🇩 (Seeing the hassle of heating up food again and again, I switched to dry cat food.)

Convenience is what moves people off homemade. Not nutrition. She did not switch because someone convinced her boiled fish was bad. She switched because reheating food twice a day is exhausting. Argue nutrition and you lose; sell the end of the daily hassle and you win. Note she landed on Chonk, so this is a live battle we are currently losing.

On dry food being bad for them

"Catfood is bad in their health, especially kebbles." 🇵🇸

"Cat parents say dry food is objectively bad because many cats struggle to drink water independently and suffer dehydration related problems." 🇵🇸

On cheap brands, and this is a gift

"Anything but Fluffy. Fluffy's cheap for a reason. You'd hear so many complaints about Fluffy causing digestive and UTI problems in cats." 🌍

"never go for whiskas" 🇵🇸

"these brand foods are deliberately made to make the pets addicted. Especially whiskas." 🌍

"DO NOT compromise on the quality of cat food. If there's one thing you cannot save money on it is cat food, since all the cheaper brands in the market are known to cause health problems (like kidney stones, chronic kidney disease, uti etc) so they will ultimately only increase the amount you have to spend on vet bills by a large amount." 🌍

The market has already built our argument against the ₪330/kg tier, and it is far harsher than anything we could say ourselves. Never name a competitor. Just make the vet-bill maths visible and let the audience finish the sentence.

On the specialised-diet gap

"But there's barely any renal cat food available Bangladesh." 🇧🇩

"The only one available is royal canin, but its way out of my budget currently." 🇧🇩

"The vet specifically told to feed gastrointestinal cat food, so right now the brand is buy is royal canin, is it available in bangladesh" 🇧🇩

Vets prescribe. Owners hunt. Nothing is in stock. This is the purple ocean stated out loud, three times, by three different people.

On why they have a cat at all

"Emotional support. Human beings might leave you one day, pets would never." 🌍

5.2C The affluent segment, found: Persian and pedigree owners

Z asked where the money is. This is where.

"Royal Canin is usually the best choice for pets if you can afford it." 🌍

"Stick to good brands like Matisse, N&D, Sheba, Applaws, Schesir" 🌍

"And Vet cost, Hygiene, food, everything goes over 5k a month." 🇵🇸

"Our cat is a Persian, he's very different than other cats. Very choosy of what he will eat." 🌐

Persians' "long coats necessitate specific dietary considerations like anti-hairball formulas"

Three things follow, and they are all good for us.

1. This buyer spends 5,000+/month and buys on vet-bill avoidance, not on price. Their stated logic is that cheap food costs more later. That is our argument, already believed.
2. Persians map exactly onto three SKUs we stock and nobody advertises: Choosy (they are famously fussy), Hairball and Skin & Coat (long coat, constant shedding, daily hairballs). This is the single tightest product-to-buyer fit in the whole catalogue.
3. ⚠️ But it repositions us. In this buyer's hierarchy the top is Royal Canin and Farmina, and Reflex sits below them. We are not the premium splurge. We are the sensible step-up: vet-grade nutrition without Royal Canin money. That frame is credible, defensible, and much stronger than "premium," which we cannot win against Royal Canin and do not need to.

Royal Canin Persian at roughly ₪2,500–3,000/kg makes our ₪793/kg look cheap. Every price comparison we have run so far has been against the ₪1,050 shops, which is the fight we lose. Against Royal Canin we are the value option. Choose the comparison.

What all of this changes

1. Trust is now priority one, ahead of price and ahead of creative. We fail this market's scam checklist on nearly every line. Fixing it is cheap. See 7.5.
2. The Persian and pedigree owner is the affluent buyer Z was looking for, and they need Choosy, Hairball and Skin & Coat, which are three of our four scarcest SKUs.
3. Reposition from "premium" to "vet-grade without Royal Canin money." Compare upward to Royal Canin, never sideways to the ₪1,050 shops.
4. Convenience beats nutrition against homemade. Sell the end of reheating, not the science.
5. Cheap food causing UTI is already believed. Never attack a brand. Show the vet bill.

6. "Stock up when you find them" is our 3-pack, in a customer's own words.
7. Renal and gastrointestinal are stated unmet needs and we stock neither. Ask the supplier what a Reflex veterinary line would cost. The market is asking out loud and nobody answers.
8. RedX is disliked by exactly our buyer. Over-communicate delivery.

5.3 Tone rules for this audience

- Warm and plain. Not clinical, not luxury. The Oskies voice is the benchmark.
- Mixed Bengali and English is normal and correct. "Cat Parent," "picky eater," "premium," "free delivery" all sit inside Bengali sentences naturally. Do not over-translate.
- Never talk down. This buyer has read more about cat nutrition than most vets she can afford.
- Address her as a parent, not a consumer.
- ✗ No em dashes in any copy (house rule).

PART 6 — Foundational Doc 4:

objections

Every one of these will be raised. In a cash-on-delivery market, an unanswered objection is a refused parcel, and a refused parcel costs us the full outbound courier.

6.1 The objections, with the answer

1. "একই জিনিস ৳১০৫০ তে পাওয়া যায়। আপনার এত দাম কেন?" (The same thing is ৳1,050 elsewhere. Why are you so expensive?)

- Force: highest. It is true, verifiable in two clicks, and three shops genuinely have it.
- Answer: availability, not quality. Of 90 listings across 12 shops, 47 are in stock. The cheapest ones are usually the dead ones. Say it plainly: it is only cheaper if they have it.
- Better still, move the comparison. Against the ৳1,050 shops we are expensive. Against Royal Canin at ~৳2,500/kg we are the sensible choice. Never volunteer the comparison that loses.

- Never: claim ৳1,450 is a competitor price. It is our own regular price. (PRICING.md)

2. "অরিজিনাল তো?" (Is it genuine?)

- Force: very high. Counterfeit incidents are documented and repacked food is a real category.
- Answer: sealed manufacturer bags, never loose, never repacked, Turkish import, batch and expiry visible on delivery. Invite them to check the seal before paying, which costs us nothing in a COD market and is close to unanswerable.

3. "আমার বিড়াল খাবে কিনা?" (Will my cat even eat it?)

- Force: very high, and it scales with the price. Risking ৳1,190 on a cat who may refuse is the core hesitation, and it is worse on the ৳3,570 3-pack.
- Answer: this needs a mechanism, not a sentence. Options in order of cost: a) the 400g ৳320 bag as a try-first add-on at checkout (never as the ad), b) an explicit first-bag promise, c) the Choosy recipe as the answer to the objection. Chonk already solved this with a ৳149 300g sampler. We have the SKU and are not using it.
-  Open decision for Z. A first-bag guarantee is the single highest-leverage offer change available and it is not in PRICING.md. See 7.4.

4. "৳৩,৫৭০ টাকা একসাথে?" (৳3,570 all at once?)

- Force: high on cold traffic. That is more than a month's food budget for most of this audience, paid in cash at the door.
- Answer: reframe from price to time. It is not a big purchase, it is three months of not worrying, at ৳1,190 a month. Show the per-month number next to the total.

5. "Chonk তো ৳৪৯৯, আপনি ৳১,১৯০ কেন?" (Chonk is ৳499, why are you ৳1,190?)

- Force: high and rising as Chonk expands to 300 outlets.
- Answer: do not attack Chonk. They are a local success story and attacking them is reputationally stupid in a community this connected. Compete on the ground they do not hold: they make one adult recipe and one kitten recipe. They do not make a urinary food, a hairball food, a sterilised food or a fussy-eater food. If a cat has a specific problem, Chonk is not an option at any price. This is another reason the problem-first strategy is correct.

6. "কখনো নাম শুনিনি।" (Never heard of you.)

- Force: high. Brand-new store, no reviews, no physical shop, a misspelled domain.
- Answer: the product brand is the trust anchor, not us. People know Reflex Plus. We are the people who reliably have it. Plus COD (they pay nothing until it is in their hands), a real phone number, and a visible Instagram.

7. "ডেলিভারি চার্জ ৭০ টাকা কেন? অন্যরা ফ্রি দেয়।" (Why ৳70 delivery? Others give it free.)

- Force: medium, but it is real. Chonk, Oskies and Pet Zone all offer free Dhaka delivery.
- Answer: free on 2+ items, which we already do, and the maths says it likely pays for itself (break-even on induced upsell is ~21%, per PRICING.md). Push the free-delivery line hard in creative; it is one of our few genuine parity claims.

8. "ঢাকার বাইরে দেন না?" (You don't deliver outside Dhaka?)

- Force: medium, and it is a real revenue leak because our whole media buy is Dhaka-only.
- Answer: waitlist capture, already planned. Make sure it is actually built before spend scales, or those clicks are pure waste.

9. "ঘরে রান্না করে দিলেই তো হয়।" (I just cook for her at home.)

- Force: high, and it is the objection we had completely missed. A real share of this market buys no commercial food at all, on cost and on the belief it is healthier.
- Answer: never tell her home cooking is wrong; she will stop listening. The angle that works is the one the local blogs already make: boiled meat loses the vitamins and minerals, raw meat carries bacteria, and cats need taurine they cannot get from rice and fish. Position dry food as the nutritional backstop alongside home cooking, not the replacement for it.

10. "শুকনো খাবার তো কিডনির জন্য খারাপ।" (Dry food is bad for their kidneys.)

- Force: medium to high among the more researched owners. "Catfood is bad in their health, especially kebbles."
- Answer: it is half true and arguing loses. Dry-only diets genuinely are a risk factor for urinary disease (AVMA). So agree, then solve: always pair a fresh water bowl in the creative, and let the Urinary recipe exist as proof we take it seriously. A brand that admits the risk and sells the fix is more credible than one that denies it.

11. "এটা স্ক্যাম না তো?" (This isn't a scam, is it?) 🚨

- Force: highest of all, and we had it ranked last. This market's default assumption is fraud, and a refused COD parcel costs us the full outbound courier, so this objection is expensive in a way the others are not.
- Answer: the full checklist in 7.5. Short version: a phone number, "pay only when it is in your hands," "check the seal before you pay," real photos, a real Instagram, and delete the invented star ratings.

6.2 The objection nobody says out loud

"I feel bad that I can't afford the best for her."

This is the quiet one and it drives a lot of behaviour, including the switch to cheap local brands and the guilt that follows it. Copy that relieves it, rather than exploiting it, will outperform copy that shames. Avoid every "your cat deserves better than what you're feeding her" construction. It is the obvious angle and it is the wrong one for this audience.

6.3 Risk reversal is the gap in our offer

Right now our only offer is a price (18% off, first 500). We have no answer to the biggest objection in the category, which is "what if she won't eat it." Chonk has a ₹149 sampler. We have a ₹320 400g bag we have decided never to advertise.

The brief's reason for not advertising it is sound (a "from ₹320" hook buys a one-bag customer who never returns). But not advertising it and not offering it are different decisions. As a checkout add-on or a guarantee it costs us nothing in acquisition and removes the single biggest reason not to buy.

PART 7 — What this means for the ads

7.1 Kill these angles

From the current STATIC-ADS-BRIEF.md rotation:

Angle	Verdict
"37% protein. Zero filler."	✗ Red ocean. 26 competitor ads claim premium, 21 claim original. Ignored.
"Now in Bangladesh."	✗ Nobody cares that a brand launched. Reflex

	Plus has been here for years, so it is also slightly untrue.
Generic value ("৳1,190 was ৳1,450")	✗ On its own it invites the ৳1,050 comparison. Keep the price, kill the price-led ad.
Brand trust / vet-formulated	⚠ Support line only, never a headline.

7.2 Test these instead

Three concepts, matching Mark's structure (1 CBO, 3 ad sets, one messaging concept per set, 2 to 6 creatives inside each):

Concept 1 — Symptom-first (the purple ocean) One ad per symptom, each naming it in the first three words. She self-identifies or scrolls past.

- "আপনার বিড়াল কি বারবার লিটার বক্সে যাচ্ছে?" → Urinary
- "রোজ সকালে হেয়ারবল?" → Hairball
- "বাটি ভরা, বিড়াল উদাসীন।" → Choosy
- Landing: the specific product page, not the homepage.

Concept 2 — The stock-out (the brand position) The one thing 12 resellers structurally cannot say.

- "যে খাবারটা ও খায়, সেটাই তো পাওয়া যায় না।" (The food she eats is the one you can't find.)
- Lead the 3-Month Supply. Three months, one order, no hunting. ৳3,570, ৳1,190 a month.
- This is our margin-best SKU and this is the honest reason to buy it.

Concept 3 — New kitten Highest lifetime value, and the buyer most willing to pay for reassurance.

- 37% protein belongs here, where it answers "am I feeding her enough to grow properly," rather than floating free as a premium claim.

7.3 Hard rules for creative

- Lead the 3-pack or a problem. Never a plain bag of food. A single ৳1,190 bag needs 4.7x ROAS on cold traffic. That is close to unwinnable. The 3-pack needs 4.8x for triple the money.
- The single 1.5 kg bag is a remarketing and refill SKU, not a cold-traffic offer. It is what you sell to someone who already bought, not what you buy a stranger with.
- We are the pharmacy, not the pet shop. Every competitor is a shop selling everything. Sell the fix for one named problem. Drop "premium," drop "100% original," drop discount-led language from the problem ads; those are pet-shop signals and they put us back in the price comparison we cannot win.

- Never advertise the 400g, the Prostar 1.2 kg, or any 15 kg. (PRICING.md)
- Never claim we treat or cure anything. "The food vets put urinary cats on," never "prevents urinary blockage." Point to a vet.
- Never attack Chonk or any local brand by name.
- Never say nationwide. Dhaka city only.
- Free delivery on 2+ bags in every single ad. It is our only parity claim against free-shipping competitors and it drives the basket size the margin needs.
- Keep the visual system as is (electric blue, one hero, Fredoka). Nothing in this research says change the look. It says change what the words are about.

7.4 Three decisions this research surfaces for Z

1. The 3-pack is currently Adult Chicken only. Every problem-first ad points at a recipe the 3-pack cannot fulfil. Making it a recipe-choice variant is a ten-minute change (PRICING.md) and it unlocks the highest-margin SKU for the highest-intent traffic. Recommend doing it.
2. No risk reversal exists. A first-bag promise or a cheap try-first add-on answers the category's biggest objection. Recommend a first-bag promise on the single 1.5 kg only, not on the 3-pack, so the downside is capped at ₳840 of cost per claim.
3. Segment C is a money pit. Confirm we are not targeting multi-cat rescuers or advertising the 15 kg. Currently correct in PRICING.md. Keep it that way.

7.5 🚨 The trust checklist (do this before spending a taka)

Bangladeshi shoppers open every new online store expecting a scam: "If I buy online, I will probably get scammed." Ad spend into a store that fails their checklist is money set on fire. Cheapest fixes first.

Fix	Why	Effort
Phone number + WhatsApp visible on site and in every ad	The single strongest legitimacy signal in this market. Scammers do not answer phones.	minutes
"Pay only when it is in your	They insist on COD anyway. Say it first and it converts from	minutes hands" stated explicitly	a payment method into a promise.

"Check the seal before you pay"	Answers the counterfeit fear with zero cost to us, and no scammer would ever offer it.	minutes
Kill the hardcoded star ratings	4.9★ (312 reviews) on a store that has not sold 312 bags is the exact "fake product photos, misleading descriptions" pattern they are trained to spot. If one customer works out we invented them, that is the story.	small
Real photos: the actual bag, the actual parcel, a real Dhaka doorstep	Everyone uses supplier stock images. Anything visibly real beats a render.	small
Fix the domain (meowbelle.shop, three L's)	A misspelled domain is a scam tell. meowbelle.shop was still available.	small
Instagram with real posts and real replies before ads run	First thing they check after clicking. An empty grid kills it.	ongoing
Set delivery expectations: window, courier, confirmation call	RedX is specifically distrusted "when ordering from independent pages."	small

⚠ The star ratings are the urgent one. Every other item is a missing signal; that one is an active liability, and it sits on a site aimed at a market whose defining complaint is being misled by online sellers.

PART 7B — Second opinion (Jeremy AI, paid-ads advisor)

Consulted 2026-07-27 on the two live questions: is problem-specific creative the right wedge at a 4.7x break-even, and should cold traffic point at the 3-pack or the single bag. Verbatim positions:

Agrees on the wedge, and for a structural reason, not a creative one.

"If you run broad commodity ads, Meta's auction will serve you to price shoppers, and price shoppers in a COD market will pick the cheaper listing every time. You don't win that fight... The moment you run an ad that opens with 'Is your cat straining in the litter box?' you've got zero competition for that impression. That's not a creative preference, that's market structure. You're the only one who has the urinary care variant in stock AND the only one advertising to the person who needs it. That's a double moat."

Agrees on leading the 3-pack, and kills the price-shock worry.

"The concern about ₳3,570 being a big first purchase in a COD market is real but overblown when you're selling to the problem-specific buyer... The urgency of the health problem collapses the price sensitivity. You're not asking someone to spend ₳3,570 on cat food. You're asking them to spend ₳3,570 to stop their cat from suffering."

Also: the single bag belongs in remarketing and refills, never cold traffic. And the framing line worth stealing: "You're the pharmacy, not the pet shop."

His pushback, which we should not wave away

"Your break-even ROAS on both products is 4.7 to 4.8x. That's brutal for cold traffic in a single-city geo with a limited TAM. Even with perfect problem-specific creative and zero competition on the variant, Meta's auction in Dhaka-only targeting is going to give you a constrained audience pool, and constrained pools mean higher CPMs and faster frequency burn. You need to be honest about whether 21% contribution margin is sustainable for paid acquisition at all, or whether this is fundamentally a business model problem disguised as an ads problem."

This is the real risk and no amount of good creative fixes it. Two consequences:

1. Dhaka-only plus a narrow problem angle is a small pool. Frequency will climb fast and CPMs with it. Budget for creative refresh sooner than a normal launch would need, and treat rising frequency as the kill signal, not just ROAS.
2. If the first ₳200–300 of spend per concept cannot clear ~4.8x, the answer is probably supplier cost, not creative. At ₳840 cost on a ₳1,190 bag there is not much room. Better supplier terms, or a higher-margin own-label product later, is the structural fix. Worth knowing that going in rather than blaming the ads for three months.

(Second opinion logged here in the Meow Belle repo on purpose. Mindframe's Jeremy consult log is a different business and these two must never cross.)

What I could NOT verify

Be honest about these. They are the weak points in this document.

1. First-party voice: partially closed.  Z supplied real Reddit quotes on 2026-07-27, now in 5.2B, which independently confirmed the availability problem and surfaced two things desk research missed (homemade food as the real competitor, and distrust of dry kibble).  Still thin: some of those quotes come from Pakistani and Indian subs rather than Bangladesh, Reddit skews far more male, English-speaking and internet-native than our actual buyer, and the largest Bangladeshi cat communities are closed Facebook groups that cannot be scraped. The Bengali-language voice in 5.1 and 5.2 is still sourced from advertisers and blogs, not customers. Next best move: 30 real posts pasted from the big BD cat groups.
 2. No evidence on how big the problem-recipe demand actually is. The logic is strong (the SKUs exist, shops list them, they are chronically out of stock) but I have no search-volume or sales data for Bangladesh. The 4-day, ₳200–300 spend test is what settles it, not more desk work.
 3. Reflex Plus reputation in Bangladesh is thin. Retailer blogs are all positive and all selling. I found no independent complaints and no independent praise. Treat "Reflex Plus is loved here" as unproven.
 4. No stock-out frequency over time. Our 52% figure is one snapshot on one day. If it holds across a second sweep in 30 days, the entire supply angle is bulletproof. Re-run the sweep monthly. It is our best proprietary data and nobody else has it.
 5. Chonk's actual scale is self-reported (1,000+ customers, 50 to 200+ outlets, figures from their own founders and site).

Changelog

- 2026-07-27 (later) — Reddit voice-of-customer added, three findings changed the plan. Z supplied real owner quotes across 8 targeted questions. New: (1) the scam-perception problem, now the top conversion risk and a new Part 7.5 trust checklist; (2) the Persian / pedigree owner as the affluent segment, added as Segment D, which also repositions us from "premium" to "vet-grade without Royal Canin money"; (3) convenience, not nutrition, is the wedge against homemade food. Also: RedX is specifically distrusted by our buyer, owners name Reflex Plus Urinary by SKU for urinary problems unprompted, and "stock up when you find them" turns out to be a coping strategy customers already describe, which is the 3-Month Supply. All quotes tagged  (Bangladeshi) or  (regional, directional only) because Reddit's summariser silently mixes in r/pakistan and r/indiasocial.
- 2026-07-27 — created. First ICP research for Meow Belle. Supersedes the single-line audience note in STATIC-ADS-BRIEF.md ("BD cat parents, young, urban, IG-active, care about quality"), which was an assumption, not research.
